The Stakeholder has identified the need to develop a robust online monitoring, evaluation and econometric modelling system for the various initiatives in order to better aid planning, monitoring, budgeting, reporting and evaluation.

The development into existing platforms for the purpose of managing existing and new data with the implementation of artificial intelligence (AI Modelling). A Two system platform for the CSIR management platform and the stakeholder's innovation programmes. The migration and integration should incorporate and evaluate 10 years of past data. The platforms should be designed to provide the relevant stakeholders with an objective tool to assist them in their decision-making process.

The development of the data analytical and information management system and econometric model is designed to provide the stakeholders with an objective tool to assist overall management by facilitating the decision-making processes around comparing and appraising the impact of different projects and initiatives.

To assess and measure the impact of the different programmes, the Programmes has developed a number of Key Performance Indicators (KPIs) that seek to set metrics for the measuring of the performance against agreed upon objectives.

Notwithstanding the above, the model should be able to:

- Allow for record management mainly under the external programmes within CSIR
- Measure the science, technology innovation (STI) and socio-economic impacts of the initiative at a portfolio, project, sector and sub-sector level
- Objectively measure these impacts of one initiative against another
- Allow for 'fine-tuning' for future resource allocations within each initiative (based on the expected economic impact of different projects/interventions)

The principle behind the development of the model is to import legacy data, update the management portal in line with the objectives set out in the RFP and gain an objective assessment of the full economic benefit that the public investment has to all stakeholders. It is therefore crucial that the model incorporates the highest-level thinking, rationale and expectations of all stakeholders.

Expected Outcomes and deliverables.

It is proposed that a phased approach, consisting of ten modules, i.e. one per phase to be adopted to ultimately establish the system. However, it will be necessary to have regular project progress meetings with the CSIR in order to verify progress and also to ensure that the expectations of the stakeholders are being achieved. It is expected to be concluded within 16 weeks. The Proposal must include an Inception Report that details the approaches, methodologies, timelines, and milestones associated with the Project. The report should also list the instruments to be reviewed.

The work plan should include the activities below, but not be limited to the following:
